

JetPay Corporation Announces John Crouch as Chief Information Officer

Key addition to JetPay's Management Team to manage and spur growth while Leading the Company's innovative technology efforts.

Center Valley, PA- April 17, 2017 – JetPay Corporation (“JetPay” or the “Company”) (NASDAQ: “JTPY”) announced today the company has added a new technology leader to its senior management team to lead the company’s information technology, including payment and payroll technology solutions, and ongoing security enhancements. Effective April 17th, John Crouch will join JetPay as the Company’s Chief Information Officer (“CIO”).

Crouch is an accomplished leader with more than thirty (30) years of experience in information technology, data security and business operations. In his role, Crouch will have oversight of all technology and will be responsible for leading the direction for ongoing technical development, driving the long-term technology and digital roadmap, including implementing ongoing product and service enhancements.

Crouch started his career with Electronic Data Systems (“EDS”) (Now Hewlett Packard Enterprise Co. (“HPE”)) where he spent seventeen (17) years in a variety of software development, systems infrastructure, and leadership roles. After EDS, Crouch held senior level positions with Certified Merchant Services and was a founding partner of Encore Payment Systems which merged with EVO Payments International (“EVO”) in 2013. Most recently at EVO, Crouch held the position of U.S. Chief Information Officer.

Crouch has lead development and implementation teams that are credited with creating innovative software systems that support boarding and underwriting, residual payments, client portals, and other integrated solutions. His teams have also developed high-volume, high-speed transaction processing engines that provided opportunities and competitive advantages in the financial services industry.

“JetPay already has industry-leading technology in many key areas – especially the fast-growing e-commerce and recurring payments segments, as well as a proven reputation for unparalleled reliability and uptime,” stated Crouch. “I’m looking forward to working with the technology, sales, and operations teams to help shape JetPay’s future information technology demands that support the opportunities and growth JetPay is currently experiencing, and to taking JetPay’s technology to the next level,” stated Crouch.

Diane Faro, CEO of JetPay, added, “With John’s experience and skill-set, his leadership will help JetPay expand our information technology and integrated development solutions to capitalize on the opportunities in our key market segments. John has proven success developing business solutions that add efficiencies, reduce internal costs, and provide innovative technology for our customers.”
